

2009 Proceedings of The 7th International JoMIQonference

July 2-5,2009 Almaty, Kazakhstan
July 6-9,2009 Bishek, kyrgyz Republic

p Korean Association of Logos Management

Regional Aspects of Development of Trade and Economic Relation of the Countries of a New Silk Way

Ludmila Yu. Dragileva • Lidinila F. Stepuleva
Vladivostok State University of Economy and Service, Russia
✉Lidinila.dragileva@vsesu.ru

Abstract

Now Russia participates in the project of revival of the New silk way which will allow to revive not only trade and economic relations at a new level but also to strengthen a good-neighborhoods. The Far East region aspires to find optimum for itself model of interaction in inter-regional cooperation. Direct trade and economic relations become stronger, various forms of trade and economic, investment, technical cooperation develop. The Affinity of Far East region to the countries ATR allows to develop economy of region with attention for both the Russian features, and the Asian achievements.

For centuries the Great silk way connected various countries and their people by mutual trading relations. The role of the Great silk way was not only in the mutual exchange with various eastern and western goods. Together with the goods new crafts penetrated into these countries as well. There was an exchange with cultural and spiritual values, political and economic relations were being formed.

People of central Asia played an important role in harmonization of relations between western and far eastern civilization.

The countries through which the Great silk way passed got new stimulus for development. The exchange of natural resources between countries contributed to development of new branches and industries.

Now Russia participates in the project for revival of the New silk way. This project will help to restore not only trade and economic relations but also strengthen good neighboring relations.

Primorsky Krai can become one of the main transport corridors, connecting the countries of Asian-Pacific region with Central Asian and Western countries. It will contribute to strengthening good neighboring relations and cooperation in the Far Eastern region that is now of top priority for Russia. Improving business relations will help to promote the economy of the region at a higher level.

The Far East region tries to find optimal model for interaction in the interregional cooperation. Direct trade and economic relations are getting stronger, various forms of technical cooperation are developing.

The economic situation of the regions is characterized by the volume of industrial products output which depends on the industry structure, their orientations on domestic and foreign markets. Close consideration of the abovementioned dependence allows to get objective information on prospects of economic development in regions, degrees of their adaptation to market conditions due to distinctive regional advantages.

The Far East is raw material oriented region.

Therefore, the Far East economy is based on raw material branches which received stimulus due to rich resource potential of the region. Fishery and forestry are the main export branches.

The main objective of the social - economic development strategy for the year 2025 is the increase of the region's competitiveness and living standards of population which are determined by such factors as attractive investment climate, steady growth of GDP, effective application of new technologies as well as socio-economic and cultural development of the region.

The Far East of Russia provides the direct access of the country to the Asian-Pacific region in terms foreign economic relations. It carries out transport and customs servicing for export - import part of country's revenues.

Due to further development of international trade provided by countries of the North - Eastern Asia. Primorsky Region can get the status of trade and transport center which provides the shipment of goods from North Eastern Asia to Western Europe and Central Asia. The proximity of the Far East region to the countries of Asian Pacific region helps to